WHEELING, AUGUST 5, 1893.

The Strange Case of Seymour.

Seymour has been known to the country for a few weeks more or less as the man who desired to add to the World's Fair the most attractive of its exhibits. His idea was akin to the Philadelphia lawyer's definition of transcendentalism: Two holes in the sand; the waves come and wash away the sand and leave the holes standing. There was to be a hole big enough to hold Seymour; he was to get in and be covered up; and that was to be the exhibit until the end of forty days, when Seymour's friends would make another hole where the old hole was and Seymour would step out just as though he had been sweetly sleeping.

They claim to do those things in India, and Seymour was fired with a patriotic ambition to bring his country up with the most advanced. If it be possible to be dead for a few weeks, say in very hot weather, or at times in very cold, Seymour wanted to show that it can be done in this country as well as any other.

The strange feature in the strange case of Seymour is that he is having trouble to find a place for his burial. Since he can't do the trick in Jackson Park he would appreciate an opportunity to do it near there. Instead of meeting with sympathetic co-operation Seymour is being shadowed and hunted, as though a man has not a right to bury himself if he prefers that way of living.

If Seymour can't succeed in any other way he might join Governor Waite's silver party. But when that goes under it will be for more than thirty days.

Now that Col. Jones, formerly of St. Louis, has the World in his editorial sling, some thoughtless persons who have been hurling ribald jests at him may deem it prudent to drop out of sight. The Intelligencer feels at liberty to welcome the gallant colonel to the metropolis.

Electrical Railway Harmony.

As the Intelligencer predicted, so it has come to pass; the electrical railway companies have hitched horses for their mutual benefit, and for all the purposes of carrying people over the river and on each side of the river the twin have become one flesh.

When the fight seemed at its height the agreement had already been reached; that is to say, it had been agreed to agree and only the formalities of the alliance remained to be adjusted on lines clearly marked out.

It never was intended to do any of the heroic things which the road from over the river asked leave to do in Wheeling. There was no thought of clinching the provisional contract made with the Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Company. It was all a light and airy summer bluff which results in a good traffic arrangement that binds close together the closely-related communities on both sides of the river.

There is business sense in one such system; there would have been none in two.

SECRECY did not keep the cholera from getting a fine start in France.

Publicity is a much better treatment, publicity and vigorous measures. The average American community bears itself as though it were well out of the cholera danger. Indifference is not safety.

Hard Times in Earnest.

A New York judge had to sit down hard on a lawyer who insisted that a woman wanted a divorce. The woman was in court to say that she did not want a divorce. The lawyer wanted to know how he was to get his fee if the wife did not get her divorce. At this point the judge kicked the lawyer out of court. What is to become of the divorce lawyers?

We are beginning to have some rains that amount to something. They are a little late for corn in this region.

MANUFACTURERS think that Democratic threats to play hob with the tariff are playing hob with business; and the free trade theorists are quite sure that the manufacturers don't know what they are talking about. When a free trade theorist comes along you must give the road and as much more of the earth as you can throw in.

Wheeling's Sanitary Condition.

The arrival of a suspected emigrant-laden steamer in New York yesterday from a cholera infected port in Italy warranted the health authorities in taking prompt measures, and it is hoped that the precautions taken will be effective. It is also a reminder that a cholera epidemic prevails in Europe, particularly in Italy, whence hundreds of immigrants are being landed on our shores every week. The quarantine regulations at our seaports are excellent, but we of the interior should not feel too confident of our security on that account. The sanitary conditions of most American cities are such that the introduction of a few cases of cholera which, however perfect the inspection may be at the seaports, are likely to escape quarantine, would result in a fearful epidemic.

In such an event it would be a miracle if Wheeling escaped. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. There is no disguising the fact that we are threatened with cholera and now is the time to prepare to fight it. The Intelligencer is not an alarmist; in urging the people of Wheeling to take prompt measures looking to the improvement of the sanitary condition of the city, in view of the serious state of affairs in Europe, and the heavy travel this way from the infected ports, it is simply doing what it believes to be a public duty.

We are advised by the city health officer, Dr. McCoy, that the health department of Wheeling is entirely out of funds, and has not a dollar at its disposal with which to maintain an adequate system of sanitary inspection. Of the $900 voted by council for health purposes $321 has been expended by the health office and the balance by the crematory. With requests from a score of points in the city for inspection, there is no means at hand to employ inspectors. He is doing the best he can under the circumstances, but cannot, without funds, place the city in such a condition as the gravity of the situation requires.

While there is yet no serious fear that cholera will gain a foothold in this country this year, there is danger, and nothing is to be lost by prompt action. In view of this fact a meeting of the health committee should be called and a system of daily sanitary inspection be provided.

Mr. SPRINGER is no longer in favor of "hole-punching" tariff bills. He wants something that will knock out the whole protective system in one round. Mr. Springer always knows what he wants.

Where Republicans Stand.

There need be no Democratic uneasiness as to the attitude of Republicans in Congress. Barring the small wild-eyed silver contingent the Republicans will stand where their party stands, for an honest and sound currency.

While the President sticks to this straight line he will have the Republican help. If in addition to this he can bring up the bulk of his own party, there will be no trouble to put through such legislation as will restore confidence in the financial system.

The Republicans will be found to be on the business side of every business question.

The dairymen who ship milk to Philadelphia have reduced the wholesale price to 34 cents a quart. The retailers promptly raised the price from 6 to 8 cents a quart. Don't you see—the less the milk costs the retailer the more he must get for it. At this rate the retailer could afford to give the old family pump a rest.

If half the New York World tells of the brutality at Elmira reformatory be true, Superintendent Brockway deserves to be paddled to death with his own paddle. Elmira is not far off in the wilderness. It is possible that these things can go on in a civilized city in a civilized state?

The destruction of the barn at Levi P. Morton's country place took with it some of the most famous bulls and cows, about ninety of them burned to death. Mr. Morton can stand the loss, but will hardly seek to repair it.

BREAKFAST BUDGET.

A Terrell county (Ga.) negro had a narrow escape from being killed the other day. He was plowing, and at the end of the furrow stopped his mule to wait for the storm to pass over. He took a seat on the plowstock while waiting. Suddenly lightning struck the mule dead, knocked the plowstock into smithereens and tumbled the negro insensible. In a short time he was up without a sign of injury.

John W. Northrup, of the state agricultural board, of California, is at present in New York on route for Bushira, Persia, where he intends securing a consignment of the famous "big tailed" sheep of Persia. These sheep will be imported by the state of California for the purpose of seeing whether they can be profitably raised in that state.

The Austin, Wash., Sentinel vouchers for this: "Frank Vinton and others caught a 300-pound sturgeon last week and made the line fast to a young tree standing on shore. Later, when they went to draw the big fish to land, they found it had escaped, pulling the tree up by the roots and taking over eighty feet of small rope along."

CHICAGO'S WHITE ELEPHANT.

The World's Fair Too Big Even for the Western Metropolis—Not a Paying Investment, Wonderful as It Is—Mr. A. W. Campbell on an Interesting Phase of the Situation.

Special Correspondence of the Intelligencer.

CHICAGO, August 2.—You have perhaps seen the statement in the Chicago papers of yesterday as to the results of the fair for the first three months of its existence and hence you are not surprised that they, in common with the people here, regard it as Chicago's "White Elephant." This is what it promises to be as viewed through their startled and apprehensive comments. They have visions of a direct pecuniary loss of fifteen millions to this community. They are now crying out for heroic measures as regards expenses and dead-headism with a view of saving the bonds and as much of the stock as possible. The fact that a million of floating debt remained on August 1 was a red rag in the eyes of the stockholders and the papers. This must be paid before the bonds are reached and the bonds must be paid before the stock is reached.

This is the situation that confronts Chicago August 1st, midway in the fair. To a community that has sunk millions in unprofitable ventures of an individual and company character growing out of the fair, the possibility of losing millions more in the shape of the bonds and stock of the fair, in such times as these, is a matter of no small moment, and hence the arousement to which I have alluded. Great and rich and powerful as Chicago is she sees in such an aggregate of loss a great set back for an indefinite time to come. Hence the vigorous call for the vigorous application of the pruning knife.

RETRENCHMENT.

First, all passes are called in, with a view of revising the list and sifting the chaff from the wheat; next, all salaries to be revised, and all fungi (among which Theodore Thomas' music figures) to be lopped off. All nepotism and favoritism that is costing money and eating into the totals of the fair is to go by the board. At least this is the demand of the press and presumably of the stock and bondholders. They have awakened to the fact that no 35,000,000 of paid admissions are in sight; that only 6,485,121 admissions are recorded up to August 1; that this is less than one-fifth of the 35,000,000 expected and proclaimed at the outset of the fair as likely during the six months of its life; that it will require 100,000 admissions per day from this time on to pay expenses and meet the bonded debt and remaining arrearage of floating debt; that thus far there have only been eighteen days on which as many as 100,000 paid admissions have been attained; that the situation of the country, financially, is so uncertain that no reliable estimate can be made as to what the current three months will yield as compared with the first three; and that, therefore, for all these reasons and for divers and sundry others, the proper thing to do is to assume no greater attendance than 100,000 from now on, and to prepare to make the fair pay its bonds, and as much of its stock as possible, on this basis of patronage.

EXPECT BETTER TIMES.

This is a diagnosis of the situation here as regards the fair up to the midway point of its career. It is fully as pessimistic as the situation warrants. The situation may turn out much more promising than this by the middle of this month, or at all events, by the end of the month. August will tell the story as to the financial and business situation. The corn crop is not yet made, and the clouds in the sky are numerous and too much set about with "silver lining," which now-a-days is not a popular lining. We want more of the gold lining that is just at this moment stroking our sky a little. "Roll on Silver Moon" and give the golden sun a better show, is the popular wish. I say with all respect to the silver lunatics who are in session in this city at this time and who will make the "bellowing forum" at Washington resound with their sophsistries next winter.

LOGICAL BUT NOT INEVITABLE.

But, returning to the matter of admissions, past and present, once more, I may further observe that some of the stockholders, especially one very sanguine real estate friend of mine, take much comfort in the Philadelphia Centennial record of 1876, as showing how the fat kind (reversing the Egyptian formula) may follow and swallow up the lean kind, and "from the nettle of danger pluck the flower of safety." In other words, they point to the fact that the first three months at Philadelphia only yielded 1,711,104 paid admissions, whereas the second three yielded 6,293,110, or over three and a half times as much. If so there, in '76, why not here, in Chicago, in '93, is the way they put it. Why not three and a half times as many here between now and November as came between May 1 and August 1? I tell my sanguine friend that his query reminds me a little of the man who listened to Chief Justice Marshall's famous decision regarding the constitutionality of the United States Banks, and who said of it that the premises were admissible, the argument logical and the conclusion inevitable, but nevertheless he (the dissenter) did not believe in the banks. And, after fashion, one might say of this parallelism between '76 and '93, between Philadelphia and Chicago, the premises may be admissible, the argument may be logical, but the conclusion is not exactly inevitable by a good deal. We were not in a bank panic, with New York exchange at a discount of one per cent in the west, as it is to-day, nor were wheat and wool away down on the bottom, below zero, where they are to-day. People were not running on the banks and hiding their money when they got it in '76.

A DIFFERENCE.

There was, it is true, the aftermath of the panic of '73 still in the land, but, nevertheless, the finances of the country were in a normal condition and people could get all the money they wanted if they had anything to sell or pledge. The case is very different to-day. Those who have credit cannot, except to a very limited extent, get money, and those who have little credit and no money are hopelessly barred from coming here. Tens of thousands of wage earners who would have been here in good times will not be here this year. The immediate future, as respects employment, was never in the history of this country more uncertain than just at this time. This is what hurts the fair's prospects so seriously and is also the explanation of the alarm that is voiced in the newspapers here. Chicago does not want to be hit any harder than possible by the results. She will be hit hard enough in all probability. She therefore demands such an extent of retrenchment as will save the bonds and if possible the stock. Even then the city and the people stand to lose a great deal.

A GUESSING CONTEST.

There is a place on the fair grounds where people record their guesses as respects the attendance for the six months. The "Old Times Distillery Company," of Kentucky, have a log still there, one of ye olden time, sure enough, wherein the modus operandi of converting corn and rye into vapor and condensing vapor into spirit is shown, and there you are expected to record your name and address and your guess as to the number of admissions between May and November. The premium to be paid to the nearest guesser to the actual number of admissions is fifteen barrels of old rye, and to the next nearest guesser ten barrels, and to the third nearest five barrels. It is interesting to look over the estimates of the multitude who have recorded themselves. They vary from eighteen to thirty millions. A Wheeling man has a guess there of 18,751,523. Col. Exley is busily engaged in looking over the situation and will file his guess at a later day. At present he has a good deal to attend to. It will take a ratio of nearly three to one to swell the 6,485,121 of May, June and July to 18,751,523 in August, September and October. This in turn will probably require brighter financial skies and cheaper railroad rates.

FUTURE FAIRS.

The new three months started off yesterday with only about 78,000 "The world's pity" that this should be the case, for this generation, and quite possibly succeeding generations, may not see another such fair. The Chicago Herald of this morning expresses the opinion that considering the great expense and great trouble of getting together such an aggregation of exhibits, with the non-paying record of international fairs, Chicago included, the fairs of the future will be more of specialties than of universal exhibits. At all events, that their scope will be much more restricted than this one. This vaticination of the Herald, not unreasonable in itself, is of course subject to what may happen in the way of an extraordinary attendance. Suppose, dear Herald, that the sun should shine out at last, after all, and that Chicago should get her money back, what then? She might want to do this thing over, as I said some time ago, in 1915. A. W. C.

YOU CAN TELL.

When they like to be alone.
 You can tell:
 When he often says: "My own."
 In a very tender tone.
 When his ardent glance you see,
 And he answers blushing,
 They are courting—he and she—
 You can tell.
 'Tis the babble of the brook, as it takes its merry way.
 Through the daisy-dappled meadow at the dawning of the day;
 When the sunny skies are fair, and the birds are in the blue,
 And the thoughts are brightly tender, for the love is sweet and true.
 You can tell!
 When they welcome others near,
 You can tell:
 When he often says: "My dear,"
 And the tone is cool and clear,
 You can tell.
 When they very well agree,
 In their simple courtesy,
 They are married—he and she—
 You can tell—
 'Tis the silence of the stream, by the mountain, through the vale,
 'Mid the long day's light and shadow, or when evening's stars grow pale,
 It has been in its course, it has deepened as it rolled,
 And the thoughts are calmly tender, for the love is sweet and true.
 You can tell!
 Whether Pasteur and Koch's peculiar modes of treatment will ultimately prevail or not, their theory of blood contamination is the correct one, though not original. It was on this theory that Dr. J. C. Ayer, of Lowell, Mass., nearly fifty years ago, formulated Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

CURES THAT LAST.

First Chapter in the Series of Interviews From Patients Whose Testimony Was Printed Three Years Ago.

To Prove the Permanent Results of Drs. Copeland, Bell and Davis' Method of Treatment—Mr. August Miller's Case.

"It has been about three years since Drs. Copeland and Bell cured me of a very serious ailment," says Mr. August Miller, the very gentlemanly proprietor of a lunch counter and saloon, Hanover street near W. & L. E. R. R. depot (telephone No. 127). Martin's Ferry, "and although I have passed through several severe winters since then I still remain well and hearty and consequently feel very grateful for being restored permanently."

MR. MILLER'S ORIGINAL STATEMENT.
 "Two years ago my trouble got so bad I was finally compelled to seek relief," says Mr. Miller. "My nose would stop up on one side and then on the other, so I could not breathe through it at all; drooping mucus from my head into my throat kept me hawking and spitting almost constantly. I had terrible headaches over my eyes, roaring and buzzing sounds in my ears, which kept me in terrible misery all the time. Finally my hearing grew so bad I could not hear anything at all. Spots would appear before my eyes. My sleep was broken and did not refresh me any; would cough very hard, and about six months ago I took to about twice a day, with sharp-shooting pains all through my chest. Night sweats set in, which weakened me terribly. I had no appetite, and what little I did eat would not lay on my stomach, causing great pain in the pit of my stomach, which grew so bad I would frequently have to resort to medical aid for relief. Bowels constipated, followed by diarrhea, pain across my back in the region of my kidneys, rheumatism in my limbs so bad I was compelled to stay in bed for one month. My feet would swell so much I could not wear my shoes. I was in this condition when I called on DR. COPELAND & BELL, four months ago. The second month of treatment I could breathe freely through my nose. I hereby testify for the benefit of human suffering. That I now feel stout and hearty. Can eat a good, square meal with pleasure. Sleep well. Have no headaches or pains any place. My ears feel as well as they ever did, and my hearing is becoming ordinary again. I now weigh thirty pounds more than I ever did in my life, and cheerfully recommend all human beings to try those eminent specialists and be relieved."
